While the SUV’s have started a never-ending triumphal procession worldwide, another vehicle segment has enjoyed increasing popularity in recent years as an off-road vehicle in the garages of collectors all over the world: the desert buggies.

Therefore, it was only a matter of time before MANSORY would take up this segment and expand its product portfolio accordingly with such a desert buggy.

Based on the Can-Am Maverick, the designers and engineers under the leadership of Kourosh Mansory created the “MANSORY Xerocole”. A unique eye-catcher and immediately recognizable as a typical MANSORY complete conversion.

As usual with MANSORY, almost all body components were replaced by those made of carbon fibre. In the course of this, the roof of the basic vehicle was also extended towards the front and now accommodates two additional headlights elegantly integrated at the front edge of the roof.

The front itself has been given an additional transverse below the headlights, giving the “MANSORY Xerocole” a completely independent appearance in conjunction with the new roof line and the windscreen, which is also new.

The body modifications are most strikingly visible in the side view of the “MANSORY Xerocole”. The installation of “normal” doors gives the off-roader increased suitability for everyday use without taking away the martial look of a classic desert buggy.

This design approach also continues in the rear area. In contrast to the standard vehicle, a more extensive trim - including a MANSORY lettering extending across the entire width of the vehicle - gives the “MANSORY Xerocole” a very harmonious appearance in its entirety, despite its clearly defined off-road character.

The elegant appearance of the “MANSORY Xerocole”, which has been painted in the exclusive “Orange Desert Sunset” colour, is also enhanced by the fact that its main colour can be found on the rims, the suspension struts, the cross struts of the suspension and on the edges of the roof, subtly accentuating the conversion in a punctual and imaginative way.

Interior

Of course, the interior design of the “MANSORY Xerocole” is in no way inferior to the refined exterior. In line with the car’s intended use, however, the interior refinement work is primarily limited to the seating system, the sports steering wheel and the controls. The two-tone colour scheme of the exterior is also continued here, following the tradition of all MANSORY refinements. In particular, the elaborately decorated seats in “Orange Desert Sunset” and “black” stand out.

Performance

On the technical side, the 3-cylinder turbo engine has been given a power boost of 30 hp up to 225 hp with the help of a modified engine management. The power of the 738 kg lightweight, dynamic driving wonder is transmitted via a CVT transmission and a visco-clutch to the rear wheels or - as required - to all wheels. Thanks to the 30x9x14 inch (front) and 30x11x14 inch (rear) tyres designed for maximum grip, the “MANSORY Xerocole” ensures the best possible traction under all circumstances and makes it possible to manage almost any off-road challenge.

Whereas sporty off-road fun in a desert buggy and the desire for luxury were previously incompatible, they have now become so with the appearance of the “MANSORY Xerocole”.
